~ LABRADATABASE ~

For 2007, we are trying a new way to fund the maintenance expenses for the LabraDataBase. There will not be any fee for entering a dog or litter.

Expenses will be covered by underwriting donors (similar to public radio). We will accept the first 25 contributors, with a $50 or greater donation, to be underwriting sponsors, for the year. Each will get a small graphic, with a link to their website, which rotates into the upper right corner of all LabraDataBase pages. Several of these underwriter links are already in place for you to view at: <http://www.labradata.org> We want to provide a lot of display time, for each rotating sponsor, so we are only accepting the first 25. We currently have 14 positions already committed.

If you would like to be included in this program, please contact us soon. If you have any questions about the underwriter program, please contact our technical coordinator at: info@labradata.org

FDA Approves Canine Obesity Drug

Washington Post - January 6, 2007

Is your hound round? Too much flab on your Lab? Is your husky, well, husky? The obesity epidemic has spread to man's best friend, and so many dogs are getting fat, that the government stepped in Friday by approving the first doggie diet pill.

The Food and Drug Administration announced the approval of Slentrol, a prescription drug that can suppress Fido's appetite while also blocking the absorption of fat from his treats.

"This is a welcome addition to animal therapies," said the FDA's Stephen Sundloff. "Dog obesity appears to be increasing."

Experts blamed the same factors that cause people to get fat: too much food and not enough exercise.

"The parallels between human obesity and canine obesity are striking," said John E. Bauer, a veterinarian at Texas A&M University. "They live with us. So when we eat too much, they eat too much. When we don't exercise enough, they don't exercise enough. And when we snack between meals, they probably snack between meals."

Americans' hectic schedules also mean many dogs spend their days cooped up in houses or apartments, eating out of boredom and getting very little exercise because owners are too busy to make it to the dog park. When owners do get home, they tend to lavish their pets with treats.

The result is that pets are getting many of the health problems plaguing overweight people, including heart disease, diabetes and arthritis.

"It's sad," said Bonnie Beaver of the American Veterinary Medical Association. "We see animals with diabetes. We see animals with arthritis in pain. Their quality of life is poor. We're killing our pets with kindness."

Dogs are considered obese if they are more than 20 percent above their ideal weight, which varies depending on the breed. More than a third of American dogs are estimated to be overweight or obese, and the problem is not limited to the canine world.

But the new drug, called a selective microsomal triglyceride transfer protein inhibitor, is only for dogs. How it works is not well understood, but it blocks absorption of fat and seems to control appetite. It is given in liquid form under a veterinarian's close supervision. It can cause vomiting, diarrhea and lethargy.

Pfizer Inc., which makes the drug, said studies found that Slentrol is safe and effective in a variety of breeds, from dachshunds to retrievers. Most lost at least some weight, and half dropped at least 11 percent of their body weight in four months. But the company and other experts said diet and exercise are necessary in addition to the drug, which will cost $1 to $2 a day.
